FADE IN:

INT. NIGHT TRAIN - DINING CAR - NIGHT

Rain streaks the black windows. Empty tables rattle with the rhythm of the rails. MARA (30s, coat still buttoned) stirs a coffee that went cold an hour ago.

DEV (30s, soaked, out of breath) drops into the seat across from her.

DEV
You kept the ticket.

MARA
(not looking up)
I keep everything. That has always been the problem.

DEV
Then keep this too.

He slides a small brass key across the table. She stops stirring.

MARA
Where did you find it?

DEV
Exactly where you left it. Taped under the third step of the old station house, next to the timetable nobody ever read. I went back every winter for six years, because you said the lock would only open on the night the last train ran, and I believed you, the way I believed everything you told me back then.
(MORE)

DEV (CONT'D)
Tonight is that night. So here I am.

The overhead lights flicker. Both of them start talking at once.

MARA
You were never supposed to come back for it.

DEV
I was never supposed to let you leave alone.

Silence. The train slows. Brakes hiss somewhere beneath them.

CONDUCTOR (V.O.)
Next stop, Harrow Junction. Harrow Junction, end of the line.

MARA
(quietly)
End of the line. Of course it is.

CUT TO:

EXT. HARROW JUNCTION - PLATFORM - DAWN

Fog over empty tracks. Mara and Dev step down from the last car as the train pulls away behind them. A rusted lockbox hangs on the station wall.

DEV
Your hands are shaking.

MARA
It's the cold.
(beat)
It isn't the cold.

She fits the brass key into the lock. It turns.

FADE OUT.